[Midland] – On June 10, Creative 360 hosts a community conversation that will add the views of 20 local arts and culture advocates to “Michigan’s Defining Moment,” a series of conversations with 10,000 citizens throughout the state. The event will be led by staff of The Center for Michigan. This nonpartisan, nonprofit group facilitates an effort driven by more than 1,800 experienced statewide leaders seeking to move Michigan to a new era of prosperity. Their goal is to bring the ideas of 10,000 Michigan residents to our state and local leaders in 2010. Participation in the Creative 360 event will ensure that the voice of citizens who care about the arts and creativity becomes a part of the conversation. The event is high energy, makes use of the latest technology, and provides a forum for helping to set a common ground agenda for the state. Learn more at www.thecenterformichigan.net.

About The Center for Michigan

The Center for Michigan is a “think-and-do tank” founded by Phil Power in early 2006. The Center’s objective is to assist our state through its current period of wrenching economic trouble and to lay the foundation of informed hope for a better future. It will help develop and execute comprehensive, long-range policy solutions to transform Michigan’s business, economic, political and cultural climate. The Center’s public engagement campaign, Michigan’s Defining Moment, is a multi-year effort to heighten public awareness of the significant challenges and opportunities Michigan faces and tighten the focus of statewide leaders on a common ground agenda best suited to help Michigan achieve a new era of sustainable prosperity.
